

The Unicode Consortium was founded in January 1991.
Its mission is to enable people around the world to use computers in any language.
The consortium maintains the Unicode Standard, a text-encoding specification.
Unicode assigns a unique code point to every character across modern scripts.
Today the standard covers more than one hundred forty thousand characters.